Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Research and Development, 2007 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)361427808 Subject: Dioxins -- Testing. Excerpt: . . . Chapter 2 Test Description 2. 1 Experimental Design Samples used in the site-specific study had been collected for the original SITE demonstration from a variety of dioxin-contaminated soil and sediment sampling locations around the country. Samples were identified and supplied by EPA Regions 2, 3, 4, 5, and 7 and the MDEQ. A mixture of soil and sediment samples that would bracket the Centers for Disease Controls Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry (ATSDR) guidance levels (DeRosa, 1997) were used. The ATSDR decision framework specifies that sites with TEQ levels between 50 and 1, 000 picogram per gram (pg g) should be further evaluated and recommends action for levels above 1, 000 pg g (i. e. , 1 part per billion (ppb)) TEQ. The samples were homogenized and characterized by HRMS prior to use in the original SITE demonstration to ensure inclusion of a variety of homogeneous, environmentally derived samples with concentrations over a large dynamic range (50 to 10, 000 picogram gram pg g). Procedures for homogenization and characterization are described in the demonstration quality assurance project plan that can be found on the SITE Programs Web Site (www. epa. gov ORD SITE) (U. S. EPA, 2004). Samples included in the site-specific study experimental design were from five of the ten original SITE demonstration sites and represented different matrices, congener patterns, and potential interferences. The environmental sites included in the site-specific study were: Tittabawassee River, Newark Bay, Solutia, Raritan Bay, and...
