Excerpt: .The grandeur of the sea during storms can in few places be more impressive than at Bude, and how liable it is to storms will be sufficiently indicated when we mention that it is a common thing for vessels to be unable to quit or enter the haven for weeks together. Three months and more have occasionally occurred during which no seaman dared to venture his craft across the bar. The castellated building that juts out with its green slopes into a bend of the little stream, and nestles for shelter behind its earthen ramparts, is Bude Caitle. The two large modern buildings in the valley are chapels, one Wesleyan, the other Free Church. The only connected row of houses is on the right bank of the stream, where too are the Bude and Globe Hotels, the latter of a very humble character. The church,...
