I have heard it said more than once, that pot fruit is not as fine as that grown in the border, and that the flavor is not quite so rich. Where such is the case, the pot fruit is not receiving proper care. If the fruit is checked in any way it will inevitably show. For instance, if the trees are allowed to suffer for want of moisture at the roots two or three times while the fruit is developing, or if too much water is given, the reaction from either will be sufficient to produce inferior fruit. Such occurrences are apt to give the pot fruit a bad name unjustly. But I can say, unhesitatingly, that the flavor of pot fruit properly grown is all that could be desired, and equal to that of fruit produced in any other way. The first thing to be taken into account for pot fruit is the temperature. When starting fruit any time from the first to the middle of January, a night temperature of 40 is needed for the first week, increasing the day temperature 10 or 15, according to the weather conditions. As the buds begin to swell, gradually increase, both night and day, and as the trees are coming into bloom, 50 by night with a rise of 10 or 15 by day will be agreeable. The main object is to get as nearly as possible to Nature's temperatures....
